A French Swindler. Eugene Altmayer, an audacious swindler. robber and forger, who has long been baff ling the police, was arrested at Havre on Sunday. The career of this clever rogue, with his escapes from the hands of justice, and the manner in which he has for several years baffled the police in their search after him, would afford material for an interesting narrative. He was never a vulgar criminal, but lived in luxury, and, under one name or another, participated in all the gayeties of French life. When in Paris he drove about in elegant carriages, was always at the theatrical premiers and at the races, and was admitted to several clus. His personal appearance was in his favor. He was of medium height, with bright eyes, auburn hair and a smiling, amiable countenance which made him a great favorite with the ladies. His father was an honorable trades-man, living in the Boulevard Haussmann, He gave to his son, Eugene Altmayer, all the advantages of a first class education, but he only profited by it to more easily make dupes. He was naturally deprayed, for, when quite young; he robbed his parents on several occasions. His father was in hopes that the army would reform him, but he stole some jewelry from the captain's chimney-piece and was condemned to five years' imprisonment. He failed in an attempt to escape by getting his fellow-prisoners to conceal him in a sack of old papers, but he obtained a commutation of his sentence, and, after serving the rest of his time in the army, returned to Paris. Here he led a gay life, and kept a carriage and mistresses, but, in 1886, he was detected in a fraud effected by imitating a person's voice in the tele-phone. He was arrested after a desperate up a policeman and took to flight.

He was again arrested and incarcerated in Mazas prison, but while the magistrate went into the antercom to wash his hands Altmayer, who had been scrutinizing the pepers on the table, snatched up a blank form of release, forged the magistrate's sig-nature, walked coolly into the next room, showed the turnkey the order and asked him to accompany him to the endorsing office to get it endorsed. This done, he walked off, the magistrate meanwhile supposing that the turnkey had been impatient and had taken him back to his cell. This happened in November, 1886, and Altmayer had the effrontery to frequent Paris cafes struggle, but, on the way to prison, tripped the authorities offering to appear and clear them on condition of a safe conduct. This summer he has been visiting a Norman watering place, dubbing himself Vicompte de Maistre, and leading a luxurious life. He induced a lady to lend him 14,000 francs, assuring her that a sale of a bit of his estates in the South would insure her speedy repayment. She had resigned herself to the loss of the money, and had resolved to keep it secret, when an unknown person presented her with an envelope containing the sum borrowed. Why he made restitution in this one case does not appear. At Biarritz he cashed a forged check for 17,000 francs. A detective traced him to Bordeaux, where he registered his luggage for Cette, but he went instead to Coutras (Gironde), and thence to Havre, where with his mistress, be arrived on Thursday. On Sunday afternoon a detective saw him taking a drive. He snatched the bridle and stopped the horse, while a colleague seized Altmayer. Taken before a magistrate he voluntarily avowed the theft of a letter containing 20,000 francs in Algeria, for which as innocent man is in custody. Altmayer, who is twenty-nine years of age, was condemned by default last February to twenty years' hard labor. He has now been brought to Paris, and there will be a second trial. His demeanor is astonishing everybody. He is perfectly calm and self-possessed, and when taken before the police commissary at Havre he made fun of the detectives, telling them he had seen them a hundred times looking for him. He had recognized them, but the detectives had failed to identify him. Addressing one of them, he said: "My poor fellow, I have kept you running after me a good long time, but now the chase is over." He will be tried for an interminable list of offenses, ranging from breach of trust to robbery and forgery.—Pall
